Meet our new Blue Devil Branch Tellers

Our Blue Devil Branch re-opened last month at Wayne Elementary School. This year, we hired 25 fifth and sixth grade students to work as tellers at school. Four teams of tellers rotate each week and will work through the end of April. They are supervised by Jillian Pierson and Alyssa Lutt from SNB, and 5th grade math teacher Andi Diediker.

Now in its third year of operation, our in-school bank is open every Thursday morning. Students receive fun incentives such as bookmarks, school supplies or coupons to local businesses based on the frequency of their deposits. The emphasis is on consistent savings. Since we started the program in 2019, more than 200 students have saved over $12,000! We're proud to invest in this program to teach young people about financial literacy and how to start saving at a young age.

What do I need to know about grandparent scams?

A recent Nebraska news report highlighted something banks see all too often - grandparent scams. Thanks to a law that went into effect last year, Nebraska banks are authorized to place a hold of up to 30 days on a transaction if they suspect a senior or vulnerable adult customer is a victim of financial exploitation. Banks may also notify family members or other third parties who can assist the senior or vulnerable adult. Following are some scams that spell trouble!

1. The "legal trouble" scam. Fraudsters often work in tandem for this one. The caller claims they are a grandchild who has just been arrested. This sets up their plea for grandma or grandpa to send money to post bail. Here's where they pass the phone to someone who claims they are the child's attorney. This speaker will ask for cash and likely dictate the terms of delivery. They might even visit the grandparent's home to pick up the cash in person.
2. The "medical trouble" scam. The caller claims they are a grandchild who has just been seriously injured. They tell a convincing tale about where, when, and how it all happened, leading to the big ask: that their grandparent quickly wire them thousands of dollars to pay the medical bills.
3. The "international trouble" scam. The caller claims they are a grandchild who is in a foreign nation, and in deep trouble for reasons they can't explain right now. They urgently request that their grandparent send a large sum of money in the mail to a specific address to help them get out safely.

Be alert and stay safe!
